In the early years the museum was in the same room with the library. Now they are separate. In 1888-89 a reading room was established open three hours each week day free to all in the college, but in 1894-95 this was combined with the library under one attendant. In 1887-88 the library moved into the new college building on the third floor. It is supported by annual appropriations, by the synod, and by students fees. It also receives many gifts from publishers and from the Students union. The hours of opening have steadily increased.
