Excerpt: .for no deficiency will then be made good, and gypsum does not contain other manuring substances, by which it could exert additional influence. 2. Gypsum, however, may act as a manure when it gives to the soil only one of its constituents which is deficient therein. Thus it may act by providing the soil and the plants with lime. Tins opinion, that gypsum plays an important part as a supplier of lime, is certainly argued at first sight by a number of facts. In the first place, these plants, upon the growth of which gypsum exercises the most favourable influence, are especially rich in lime. Thus, for example, there exists in 1000 lbs. of dried crops of--Green-cut clover, lucerne, c. 18--20 lbs. lime, Bipe peas, vetches, c. 14--16 Colza and summer rape. 12--13 Cereals only. 4--5 The quantity of gypsum laid on in a single...
