Excerpt: . . . impossible to fill up; and its result was an apathetic indifference to every passing event. Fainter and fainter grew every effort at cheerfulness; listless and unhappy, her pale countenance was too faithful an indication of the knowing ravages of the worm at her heart; which, having already consumed her spirits, Charles shuddered as he beheld her health and faculties also becoming its prey. Time, he had hoped, would gradually efface every painful recollection; but Emily, alas! alike untutored in the school of adversity, and habitually and wilfully blind to the only true source of consolation, had no idea beyond yielding herself up to her own overpowering feelings; whilst her brother, aware of this, bitterly and deeply deplored it. One evening she sat alone in the library. He entered; and, placing himself in a chair opposite to her Emily, he said, with some hesitation, you may recollect about a year since my intimating to. you my intention of going to the Continent. You opposed it, and I relinquished the idea. -Now, he added, with more embarrassment, I suspect I can better be dispensed with. I do but tease you. -My absence, therefore, may possibly prove arelief. Should you, however, at any time wish for my return, write to me, and I will come to you. He paused, awaiting her reply; but Emilys startled looks fell doubtingly for a moment upon the face of her brother, as if questioning the sense of the unexpected intelligence; then,...
